ISSUE NO. 6

EDITORIAL

'None of us knows what 2020 will bring. Of course, we aim for a stable educational environment; however, there may be some challenges'. These were my words In January - how wrong I was.

Just as many business enterprises are experiencing financial pressure, so are schools experiencing a similar reality. The re-opening of schools on June 8 2020 clearly identified this issue as a matter that needs to be addressed. It is an incontestable fact that the coronavirus has had a seriously disruptive effect on schools and communities, and that it is still having that effect.

I am well aware of the direct relationship between parents' income patterns and the ability to pay school fees. Our credit controller records and we understand those cases where such payment has become impossible, but we are making a call to parents to pay school fees whenever possible.

The ability of our school to appoint and continue to pay teaching staff at this establishment is directly determined by the receipt of school fees. Our School Governing Body employs teaching staff for a variety of reasons; the most important are:

- The provision of smaller classes because there is a direct link between smaller classes and a more focused attention on learners and their performance.
- The ability to offer scarce subjects.
- The provision of social workers and counsellors.

In light of a number of personnel with comorbidities, the need for the service of these educators is even greater.

No school can function only on promises and good intentions. School fees are of the utmost importance for schools to provide an even better service to learners, parents and the community. Teaching staff in the service of the school are an incredible asset and allow schools to fulfil their service to the community. This asset cannot simply be allowed to be lost.

As you know, we are providing various teaching platforms for all grades during lockdown, and this will continue until our Grade 8 learners finally return.

DECIDE. COMMIT. SUCCEED.

Regards

Dr L. P. Harmer
